Egypt Exploration Fund.

Report of the Twenty-fourth Ordinary General Meeting.

(TWENTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING.)

THE TWENTY-FOURTH ORDINARY GENERAL MEETING of the EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND since its incorporation as a SOCIETY (the twenty-eighth since the foundation of the Fund in 1882) was held on Tuesday afternoon, November 8th, 1910, in the rooms of the Royal Society, Professor A. H. Sayce (Vice-President) in the Chair.

There were present: Mr. H. A. Grueber, Hon. Treasurer; M. Naville; Mr. Percival; Mrs. McClure; Prof. Petrie; Mr. John Ward; Lady Evans; Miss Emily Paterson, Secretary, etc., etc.

The proceedings were opened by the CHAIRMAN, who called upon the Secretary to read the minutes of the last meeting. After the minutes had been read and approved, the following names of Members of Committee retiring by rotation and of Auditors, who offered themselves for re-election, were announced:—

The Rev. Professor A. H. Sayce (Vice-President), Mr. Newton Crane, Professor E. A. Gardner, Mr. F. Ll. Griffith, Mrs. McClure, Mr. F. G. Milne, Mr. Robert Mond, the

Marquis of Northampton, Dr. Allen Sturge, Mrs. Tirard; and the Honorary Auditors, The Rev. Edmund McClure and Mr. F. G. Milne.

Mr. H. R. HALL proposed, and Mr. R. H. B. BOLTON seconded, the re-election of retiring members of Committee and Hon. Auditors. The motion was carried unanimously.

FINANCIAL REPORT OF THE HON. TREASURER FOR 1909–10.

For the twenty-fifth year in succession it is my duty to submit to you a statement of the present financial position of the Egypt Exploration Fund and its Branches, and to render you an account of our expenditure and receipts during the last twelve months, that is from the 1st August, 1909, to the 31st July, 1910.

Before doing this I think you should be acquainted with the nature of our last season's work, and in what districts and localities our researches were carried out.

The Fund proper continued its work at Abydos under the general superintendence of Prof. Naville, but under somewhat different circumstances as regards the personnel of the expedition. Almost at the last moment, when the work was about to commence at Abydos, the Fund lost the services of its efficient officer, Mr. Ayrton, who unexpectedly was offered by the Government an important position in Ceylon. The appointment held out such favourable prospects to Mr. Ayrton that the Committee felt bound to release him from his engagement. This loss was, however, to a very great measure compensated by the appointment to Mr. Ayrton's place of Mr. T. E. Peet, who though he had not had so much experience of Egypt, yet brought to bear on his work a profound and scholarly acquaintance of prehistoric archaeology, which quite fitted him to take over the Fund's work in Egypt. We were also unable to secure the services of Mr. Loat, who had acted as second in command to Mr. Ayrton; but in his place we found a competent assistant in Mr. J. A. Dixon, who also came with some experience of Egypt. The Fund was singularly fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Peet and Mr. Dixon at such a critical moment, for at one time it seemed that we should have to abandon the expedition for the season.

In the Archaeological Survey Branch, Mr. Griffith took up the work, and journeyed into the Soudan, a district quite new to the operations of the Fund, and he was able during a residence there of some three months to obtain sufficient material to supply two volumes of Memoirs. Mr. Griffith was chiefly engaged in collecting Meroitic inscriptions, which promise to be of great interest. The first Memoir, giving an account of his discoveries, is already in the printer's hands.

Owing to the continued ill-health of Dr. Grenfell, Dr. Hunt was unable to go to Egypt, as it would have considerably interfered with the progress of the production of another volume of the Oxyrhynchus Papyri. His place was therefore taken by Mr. A. M. Blackman, who had previously worked for the Fund, and he had as his colleague Mr. J. de M. Johnson, who had taken part in a former expedition with Dr. Hunt, and was therefore not a novice to the work.

These particulars, brief as they are, will enable you to follow more easily the various items of our expenditure of last year, and they will also show you that in each section active operations of excavation and research were carried out.

I will now take the accounts in their usual order.

First of all comes that of the Fund proper. The total expenditure on this account was £1,860 18s. 11d., which is somewhat in excess of that of last year. This is partly due to the circumstance that excavations were carried out simultaneously in two separate spots of the site. Abydos is an extensive district, and it was thought advisable that whilst Prof. Naville was continuing his researches in the Royal Tombs, Mr. Peet and Mr. Dixon should test the outlying tombs. The actual cost of the expedition was £1,074 1s. 10d., but to this amount we have to add the sum of £82 0s. 6d., which was due to Mr. Ayrton, and which in fact represented his salary from August to November, when his appointment terminated. Of this total expenditure of the expedition £384 4s. 1d. was for the salaries of Mr. Peet and Mr. Dixon; £461 for the wages of the workmen; £59 10s. 6d. for Mr. H. R. Hall's expenses; £44 10s. 4d. for materials and house repairs; £40 for the establishment of a light railway, and the rest for the transport of the antiquities discovered and for guards, who had the protection of the site during the remainder of the year after the expedition terminated. Of these items only two, I think, need any particular mention. The first is the light railway. During the previous season the work of excavation of the Royal Tombs had been somewhat impeded on account of the need of a light railway, such as Prof. Naville had made use of at Deir-el-Bahari. To obviate this difficulty M. Maspero again, as on former occasions, generously came to the aid of the Fund, and offered to provide a railway on the understanding that we would bear the cost of its transport. The offer was at once accepted; but as the laying of the railway required some experience, the Committee asked Mr. Hall, of the Egyptian Department in the British Museum, if he would undertake the work. Mr. Hall at once consented, provided that his expenses were paid. The work was successfully carried out, and by the time that Prof. Naville arrived in January some progress had been made in clearing the site of a large amount of rubbish, which had been left by previous excavators. I ought to mention that Mr. Hall thus devoted the greater part of his annual official vacation, and I think that he is quite deserving of your thanks for again giving us his services.

On our Publications there has been an outlay of £392 3s. 2d., which is more than £80 less than last year, though we have provided one complete Memoir, XIth Dynasty Temple, Part II, and cleared up a small debt on Deir-el-Bahari, Vol. VI. The remaining part of this amount was as usual in respect of the Archaeological and Annual Reports, for packing, and for insurance of our stock. There was also the usual expenditure on the Exhibition at King's College, amounting to £35 3s. 3d., and for photographs £57 8s. 4d., which are mainly for the illustration of our Memoirs.

The proportionate office expenses, including salaries, rent, postage, the housekeeper's wages, gas, etc., came to £219 18s. 10d., which is slightly in excess of last year's, because these charges are regulated in connexion with the receipts of the two Branches.

The total receipts of the Fund proper during the year from all sources have been £1,575 14s. 7d., which is slightly in excess of those of last year. This sum includes a special donation of £98 19s. 10d. from the Society for the Preservation of Ancient Monuments in Egypt, which has been dissolved. It was given specially in aid of the excavations on the site of the Royal Tombs at Abydos.

If compared with last year, it will be noticed that the sum of £858 9s. 7d. received from English subscriptions is considerably below that of last year, which stood at £1,105 10s. 2d. This deficit is not, however, so serious as at first sight might appear. Last year I had to bring into the account no less than £104 15s. for subscriptions in arrear, also £83 8s. for special donations. Since July we have received £37 3s. from subscriptions due during 1909–10, and there is still owing about £65. If we add to these £21, representing the loss through the death of members, it will be seen that the receipts under this heading stand about the same as in former years.

Turning to America, I am very happy to say that we have recovered much of our lost ground, which is entirely due to the energetic labours of Mrs. Buckman, who undertook at the special request of the Committee to resume her duties as Secretary. In 1907–8 the American subscriptions in all amounted to £136 16s.; in 1908–9 they rose to £181 5s. 9d.; but in 1909–10 they have leaped up to £448 os. 10d. The affairs of the Fund are now conducted in Boston by a small committee, consisting of the Hon. Charles L. Hutchinson, LL.D. (Vice-President); Professor W. W. Goodwin, LL.D., etc. (Vice-President); Mr. Robert Farquhar, as Hon. Treasurer; Mr. Dwight Lathrop Elmendorf, Ph.D., as Hon. Secretary; and of Mrs. Buckman, as Acting-Secretary. I should like, if I may, to convey to this limited body your congratulations for their success, and your best thanks for the energy they have shown in thus resuscitating the Fund in the United States.

The receipts from Publications also show but little diminution, being within £3 of those of last year, viz. £108 os. 3d., as against £105 4s.

In spite of these slightly increased receipts, and in spite of the care exercised by the Committee and the Secretary, Miss Paterson, I regret to say we have exceeded our income by £285 4s. 4d., which reduces our capital by that amount. With the heavy cost of Publications and an annual expedition, the latter amounting usually to over £1,000, an income of about £1,500 is not sufficient. If it could possibly be increased by another £300 our financial position would remain unimpaired. We are expecting a still better return from America, but I should like to appeal to those at home to show a similar interest not altogether by increasing their contributions, but by enlisting the support of their friends who are interested in the work of the Fund, and who have so far not ventured to come forward with financial aid.

Before closing my remarks on the finances of this Fund, I feel I must once more tell you that Prof. Naville has again acted with his customary liberality. He has not drawn upon the Fund for any of his expenses in connexion with his visit to Egypt, and he has thus placed us under still further obligations. With his name I must also associate that of Madame Naville, who was again with him at Abydos, and to whom we are so deeply indebted for her beautiful and artistic illustrations in our Memoirs.

The next account is that of the Archaeological Survey, which is always a more simple affair. Our payments in this Branch have been £383 5s. 6d., of which sum £300 5s. 7d. went towards the expenses of Mr. Griffith's expedition to the Soudan, where, as I have already told you, he collected sufficient material for two Memoirs, one of which is in the press. During the present year the Survey has not issued any Memoir, and the remaining sum of about £85 has provided for the proportionate charges for the minor publications, and for office expenses.

The receipts at home and in America have been £379 0s. 6d., which leaves a small overdraft of about £4. In the subscriptions in England there has been a diminution of about £44, but this has been more than counterbalanced by those from America, which show an increase of £54. The non-issue of a Memoir brought down the receipts under publications by about £45. I quite anticipate we shall more than recover this last deficit in the course of the present year; but in the case also of the Survey I should like to see an increase of subscribers, which after all is the soundest basis of income.

The last account with which I have to deal is that of the Graeco-Roman Branch. Here also we had to send out an expedition in order that we should not lose the site which had been reserved for the Fund by the Service des Antiquités, and which we were from unfortunate circumstances unable to attack in 1908–9. The expedition was I believe a success, but I feel it will be long before we are so fortunate as to find so rich a hunting-ground as Behnesa.

The total expenditure of this Branch has been £1,067 11s. 10d., which may be briefly analysed as follows: £442 6s. 8d. for the expedition; £482 5s. 10d. for publications; and £142 19s. 4d. for office and secretarial expenses.

In the publications the chief item was £391 9s. 3d. for Oxyrhynchus Papyri, Part VII. The other items are so close to those of last year that I do not think they need any mention.

The receipts, on the other hand, amounted to £791 10s. 5d., as against £988 13s. of last year. The difference is not due in any great degree to the falling off of subscriptions, though there has been a slight shortage, but mainly to the fact that the Oxyrhynchus volume was issued before August of last year, and the Clarendon Press did not send in its account till after the close of the financial year; and besides that the Committee issued a special appeal which brought in close on £100. The American account shows an advance of nearly £40. The smallness of the American contribution is always a surprise to me, when one considers the great interest shown there in any new discovery in the classical world of literature. One can only conclude that this deficiency may be accounted for in the more ready sale of our Publications direct from the publishers. I have not had an opportunity of analysing this account, but I think this must be the cause.

The difference, then, between the expenditure and receipts is £276 1s. 5d., a great part of which I hope will be recovered by the publication of the next Memoir. Moreover, we shall not have a regular expedition this year: but Mr. Johnson will proceed to Egypt, to have a look round, and see if he can light upon a promising site for another year's campaign.

The General Balance Sheet shows that the total assets of the Fund and its Branches amounted on the 31st July last to £3,494 15s., as against £4,060 5s. 9d. last year. These assets may be apportioned as follows:—To the Egypt Exploration Fund, £2,040 1s. 4d.; to the Archaeological Survey, £871 17s. 4d.; and to the Graeco-Roman Branch £582 16s. 4d. As in previous years, our investments, which amount to £1,000 Consols and £1,000 India 3 per cent., and which form the assets of the Egypt Exploration Fund, are put at cost price. I need not say that this does not represent the true market value with Consols at 80, but the auditors thought it better for the present to leave these amounts as they have been shown in previous balance-sheets. I hope that we shall not need to draw on the reserve, and that some improvement may be soon forthcoming.

Mr. MARTYN KENNARD moved, and the Rev. B. H. ALFORD seconded, the adoption of the Financial Report and Blance Sheets. It was carried unanimously.

THE HON. SECRETARY'S ADDRESS.

On this occasion, when you have come specially to hear M. Naville, I may be excused for not giving a recital of what has been done during the past year in the wide field of Egyptology, such as you were accustomed to have from our former President, Sir John Evans; and for the same reason I need not say anything about the work done for the Fund at Abydos by M. Naville himself.

On behalf of the Committee, it is my duty to express the regret felt by all of us at the resignation of our Chairman, Sir Herbert Thompson, who was good enough to undertake to preside regularly at our monthly meetings when we elected Lord Cromer to be President. His services were of great value to us at a period of change in our affairs, but he has now been compelled to retire owing to frequent absence from London and other calls upon his time.

Of the members whom we have lost by death, I would specially mention two, both of whom were known to me personally. The Dean of Lincoln, the Very Rev. E. C. Wickham, who died on August 18th, at the age of 75, was a subscriber to the Graeco-Roman Branch from its foundation. Though best known as an educationist—Tutor of New College, Oxford, during the period of reform, Head Master of Wellington for twenty years, and author of the standard edition of Horace—he was also a scholarly theologian, as may be seen from a paper published posthumously on the revision of the Prayer Book. Mr. J. Allanson Picton, another subscriber to the Graeco-Roman Branch, who died on February 4th, at the age of 78, was likewise, in a different way, both educationist and theologian. He was elected as a member of the first School Board for London, where he served for many years, afterwards sitting in the House of Commons as M.P. for Leicester. Among several books that he wrote, all inspired by a devout pantheism, may be mentioned The Mystery of Matter (1873) and The Religion of the Universe (1904).

Other members of the Fund that have been lost by death during the past year are Archbishop Maclagan, Mr. Felix Cobbold, M.P. for Ipswich, and Professor J. Merkel, who had long occupied the chair of Roman Law at Göttingen.

The Publications of the Exploration Fund are still in arrears, and the second part of the XIth Dynasty Temple at Deir-el-Bahari, which has lately been presented to subscribers, is, I am sorry to say, the Memoir for 1907–8. This volume is of special interest and value on account of Madame Naville's beautiful coloured drawings of the shrines, which she laboriously restored from small fragments. The next Memoir will be a record of the work at El Mahasna, a pre-dynastic cemetery excavated by Mr. Ayrton and Mr. Loat, under M. Naville, in 1908–9.

The Archaeological Survey is also in arrears, the last Memoir issued being El Amarna VI. for 1907–8. As already mentioned, however, Mr. Griffith has two volumes on Meroitic inscriptions well in hand for the years 1908–9 and 1909–10, and negotiations are now being made with our former author and explorer Mr. N. de G. Davies for a volume for the current year on Theban tombs.

The Graeco-Roman Branch is more forward than the other branches, but Oxyrhynchus Papyri VII., distributed last February, was due to subscribers for 1908–9.

Concerning the new volume of Oxyrhynchus Papyri, which will form the annual Memoir of the Graeco-Roman Branch for 1909–10, Dr. Hunt sends me the following particulars :— In the theological section two texts call for special mention, one relating to the Old Testament, the other to the New. The first is a fragment of the old Latin version of the book of Genesis. The Vetus Itala, or old Latin translation of the Bible, which is supposed to have been made in the second century, and was superseded by the Vulgate, has only been partially preserved ; and since the Oxyrhynchus fragment includes several verses which are not otherwise extant, it is an acquisition of considerable value. The second fragment belongs to an apocryphal gospel. Its identity is not determined, but heretical tendencies are evident, and the gospel is probably to be associated with the Valentinian Gnostics. Of the new classical texts the most important is a papyrus containing remains of the poems of Cercidas, a writer who has hitherto been hardly more than a name to us, probably not even so much as that to some Greek scholars. He lived at Megalopolis in the latter part of the fourth century B.C., and wrote moralising lyrical poems in the Doric dialect. Upwards of 150 more or less complete lines are recovered in the new papyrus, and an estimate of the poet's quality is for the first time made possible. His verses are curious and interesting, but can scarcely be said to possess a high literary value ; and it is rather surprising to find that he had any vogue in Roman Egypt. Another papyrus contains fragments of a satyric drama of the best period, possibly by Ion. There is one well-preserved passage of twenty lines, besides a number of smaller pieces. The chief prose items are a short fragment of Hellanicus, and some valuable Homeric scholia, in which are incorporated numerous citations, to a large extent novel, from various poets. Extant classical authors will be represented by papyri containing portions of Bacchylides, Hesiod, Herodotus, Demosthenes, Isocrates, Cicero, and Virgil; and the usual selection of non-literary documents will conclude the volume, which, it is hoped, will be issued during the spring of next year.

PROF. NAVILLE'S LECTURE.

EXCAVATIONS AT ABYDOS.

Abydos is a place where most of the Egyptian explorers have worked. Mariette, the founder of the Cairo Museum, cleared the two temples, and got out of one of the mounds called Kom es Sultân a considerable number of steles, some of them very important, of the XIIth and XIIIth Dynasties. The place has never been completely neglected by the directors of the "Service des Antiquités," but no sensational discoveries were made there before the year 1896, when M. Amélineau tried the big mounds called Omm el Gaab, and found there the oldest Egyptian monuments known, the so-called royal tombs of the three first dynasties. After him, Prof. Petrie followed up M. Amélineau's discoveries, added a good deal to what his predecessor had found, and based upon these discoveries a reconstitution of those early dynasties of which we shall have to speak further. We are indebted to Prof. Petrie for other important finds, of the XIIth Dynasty and of the early dynasties, of the time of Thothmes III, and for the discovery of the Osireion, a vast construction, of which he cleared only one chamber, covered with funeral inscriptions. After Prof. Petrie, Mr. Garstang has also got some valuable objects from tombs which seem to be historically dated.

One may well ask what reason directed us to go again to Abydos after so many distinguished explorers, and whether there seemed to us to be any prospect of our making a discovery worth the money and worth the labour bestowed upon the place.

If I may express my own opinion, I must say that from the first the reason which induced me to urge the Committee of the Fund to apply for Abydos was the desire to complete the still unfinished work at Omm el Gaab, which is of first-rate importance, and to do that work on the principle which we were among the first to adopt: that of clearing the old monuments, not merely taking out of them the objects which may fill our museums, but of showing what they were, when exposed to view. It is on this principle that we cleared the two temples at Deir el Bahari, which anyone may now look at. The Germans and the Americans have lately done the same near the Pyramids. But allow me to leave for the end this question of the royal tombs.

We had hardly started our work, when we found ourselves in the midst of so-called prehistoric or predynastic monuments. Mr. Ayrton and Mr. Loat excavated last year one of the cemeteries to which this name is given. But this year's work in my opinion changed considerably the point of view and raised this question of primary importance: is the name of predynastic or prehistoric given to the tombs found in great number during the last twenty years correct, or do they belong to a set of people who are not quite the same as the Pharaonic Egyptians?

Let me begin first with a geographical point. The so-called prehistoric cemeteries have been found nearly all over Egypt. Last year one was discovered near Cairo on the right side of the Nile. Every year new ones are discovered at the edge of the desert, every year also the fellaheen plunder a certain number. In Middle Egypt, for instance, from Mahasna, where Mr. Ayrton worked last year, as far as Thebes, the whole region seems to be a long cemetery. Now I ask, if all these tombs are prehistoric or predynastic, where is the population which lived there during the 4000 years of the historical period? Where have they been buried? What remains of them, apart from the great buildings like Denderah, or the tombs of rich men in their neighbourhood? How is it that their tombs have disappeared, while the surface-tombs of the prehistoric people remain in great number?

The typical prehistoric tomb to which attention has first been drawn by Prof. Petrie at Nagadah, is a square or oval pit of a very small depth, five or six feet, sometimes even less. The body is generally lying on the left side, there is no mummification such as we find later. The body is contracted, with the knees bent up against the chest, and the hands clasping the knees or held before the mouth. This position has been called "embryonic"; but it appears to me that we have a better explanation in Herodotus, who speaking of the Nasamonians, an African people, says that they bury their dead in a sitting posture, taking care when a man expires to place him sitting. When we speak of men sitting, we must not think of men sitting on chairs, or even stools; chairs do not belong to the furniture of the desert. We must think of men sitting on their heels, as even now do most of the Orientals, and as we see in a considerable number of Egyptian statues, even of men who do not belong to the poorer class. A dead body in that position would fall naturally on the left side, the side of the heart. This sitting posture is that of everyday life, it is that which the hunter assumes when he returns to his tent or hut, to rest after his labour. Now place beside the dead man some jars or vessels containing grain or other food, and the tomb will become the picture of the hut where he sat or crouched with his primitive furniture around him. These tombs belong to people having reached the neolithic degree of culture ; we have nothing older in Egypt except perhaps a few palaeolithic remains. We do not know of any other people having occupied Egypt before them, and the likeness of their civilisation with that of other parts of North Africa, as well as the types of their skulls, show clearly that they were of African origin. The idea of Prof. Eduard Meyer and of the Berlin School that they were semitic tribes who invaded the land, which they found empty, is a pure hypothesis which does not rest on any historical or archaeological proof. We must consider these primitives as what is called now in history native or indigenous. I cannot go over all the proofs showing their African origin ; these men are the representatives of the Hamitic race.

The neolithic civilisation has often been described. In the tombs are found vases of various styles and various shapes ; some have pictures which show what the life of these natives was. They had huts built on raised ground. The childish representations which have been left of these huts have often been taken as being boats, but it would be extraordinary that we should see only boats and not a single dwelling, since we cannot admit that they lived on boats like gipsies in their cars, still less that in these boats we should see antelopes and ostriches. These pictures show that they were hunters, the bow and arrow were their chief weapons, and they do not seem to have had any of the domestic animals which we see later in great abundance. They were very clever potters, and they could also work hard stone ; their instruments were of flint only. We find in their tombs some specimens which are of a workmanship which has not been surpassed. Flint and hard stones were also used for ornaments, as well as bone and ivory. One of the most characteristic objects of these tombs are the so-called palettes made of slate, some of which are in the form of fishes or birds, or even hippopotami. Others are in the form of cakes or loaves, such as the one which a dead man in a crouched position, to be seen at the Museum in Berlin, holds to his mouth; others are lozenge-shaped, sometimes very long, with a small cavity in the middle. Mr. Petrie supposes that they were for rubbing paint for the eyes, I think they had a religious purpose. These are the chief features of the neolithic civilisation, generally called prehistoric or predynastic, and, as I said, considerable remains of it have been found not only from Cairo to Aswân, but even in Nubia, where they have been very closely studied, before the raising of the barrage will swamp and destroy all these cemeteries.

The name of predynastic or prehistoric is considered now as so well established that nobody thinks of questioning it. Who ever finds a tomb like those we have just described will say at once that it is prehistoric, and if in a cemetery of that kind there are Egyptian pits, it will be pronounced at once that a predynastic site has been occupied by the Egyptians. It is also declared with equal assurance that the prehistoric is necessarily older than the Egyptian culture, that it is its infancy, and that it disappeared with the spread of a more advanced civilisation and with different religious ideas.

This favourite theory of the present day seems to me not to tally with the facts derived from the excavations, and to be quite at variance with what we see now. We cannot suppose the primitive man to have had a very different nature from ours. What do we see in our time? We see that the more rudimentary a culture is, the more strongly do its adherents cling to it. Even in our highly civilised countries, in our time of schools and education, we can notice how local tastes and local customs are deeply rooted, even religious ideas and practices which go back to pre-Christian times.

Let us take now a large country like Egypt: a valley over a thousand miles long, with no centre from which an influence might radiate towards the circumference. This valley is inhabited by a native population, of African origin, Hamites who have reached the degree of neolithic civilisation.

Evidently this civilisation will not be exactly the same all along the river, there will be differences arising from the fact that the material out of which they make their instruments will not be the same, or because the skill or the tastes of each tribe will be different. Because in one place the pots or the flints will be of better workmanship, that will not mean different stages in the prehistoric culture, it will not mean a chronological succession.

Let us suppose further that conquerors of a kindred race to the aborigines, but with a more advanced civilisation, and especially different ideas about burial, settle in the country. They will bury their dead according to their own ideas, they may possibly occupy cemeteries of the aborigines, but they will not occupy the whole country at once, their influence will not be felt of a sudden over the valley; for generations the aborigines will go on burying their dead as did their fathers.

I believe, therefore, that each place of some importance has its own history as to civilisation and culture. Unless there is positive proof that it is so, an object which is known to be of the style of the IVth Dynasty at Memphis may be of a very different date at Aswân. How would the modifications supposed to arise from a change in the dynasty spread in the country, through what channel did they pass? How long did the passage last, and how could these changes be enforced? Because another dynasty comes to the throne at Memphis or Thebes, what reason is there that a woman in a remote village should change the beads of her necklace, or the pots in which she cooks her food?

This digression was necessary to explain the value and the interest of the cemetery which we excavated during the greatest part of the winter, and which I shall call the mixed cemetery. I do not deny that there may be in that spot really predynastic tombs, but there is no proof of it; and what seems to me the most ancient burial is an Egyptian pit, the only one found intact. It consists of a rectangular shaft about fifteen feet deep, on one side of which opens a chamber which was hermetically closed by a well-built brick door. The style of this tomb is exactly that of the XIth Dynasty; we found several quite alike at Deir el Bahari. After having removed the bricks of the door, and when we entered the chamber, we found a coffin, rectangular like those of the XIth Dynasty, but which had been entirely eaten up by the white ants; the dust of it only remained. Near the body, on the left, was a small offering table with the niches for the objects used in the ceremony of opening the mouth; the little vases intended to be in the niches were close by; only one amulet was wanting. Besides these there were two sitting alabaster figures, and an ivory figure standing; all these objects of the truest Egyptian character. The form of the tomb would lead me to consider it as being of the XIth Dynasty, perhaps also the style of the statuettes, although I cannot consider the argument of style as very strong. But what would lead me rather to the VIth is the table of offerings. I saw one much finer, but exactly the same type, in a dated tomb of the VIth Dynasty discovered by Mr. Reisner.

Close to that Egyptian tomb, and separated from it by the rock not more than one foot thick, was a native surface tomb, oval, with red vases and a crouched body. I have no hesitation in saying that it would have been impossible to dig the large tomb, the deep shaft, without disturbing the small one. In clearing the sand so as to show the rock and trace the shaft, the small surface burial would have been broken into, and possibly swept away. There is no doubt that it is of later date than the Egyptian tomb.

After the tomb which I have just described, we excavated a great number of Egyptian shafts. Not one of them was intact, they had all been reused, sometimes twice; when there was a chamber, either the door had disappeared, or it had been broken into, and the remains of it left. Most of these tombs had the regular Egyptian form, a deep shaft with a side chamber ; but the deceased was not an Egyptian, there was no Egyptian coffin, and a total absence of the objects which constitute an Egyptian burial. The coffins, if there were any, were rudely-made boxes, and the bodies in various positions.

Sometimes prehistoric or what I call native tombs were made over the Egyptian tombs, and for that purpose a slight cavity was cut in the rock forming the wall of the shaft. When it was reoccupied and dug out again, the small tomb was cut through, a little bit of mud or brick wall was made to close it on the side, flush with the wall of the shaft, and the bones were sometimes gathered together in the part which remained untouched. Here again, I maintain that it would have been impossible to dig the shaft in the rock without destroying the small tomb. The mud or brick wall was not made by the men who originally dug the shaft, but by those who cleared out the rubbish with which it had been filled, in order to reuse it. The proof of it is this positive fact, that every one of the shafts which cut through a surface tomb was reused, not by Egyptians, but by the men who were buried in the native tombs. This seems to me the reason why the surface tombs were preserved and not destroyed. The men who reoccupied the Egyptian shafts were the same as were buried in the surface tombs.

In fact, we have here a curious example of an Egyptian cemetery which may be of the VIth or XIth Dynasty, having been invaded by the old native stock. Before this cemetery had been covered up again, looking at it from above, it was impossible not to be struck by the way in which the space had been made use of. The least interval between the shafts was occupied by native tombs or tombs of children. It is difficult to fancy big shafts being dug in such a crowd of small tombs. In order to reach a depth of ten or fifteen feet, it requires a considerable amount of labour ; besides, a mass of stone chips has to be taken out of the pits. Can we imagine the Egyptian workmen, such as we know them, applying such a minute care, so as not to disturb the small pits which were only a few inches distant? Nothing has contributed so much as this general view of the cemetery to strengthen my conviction that the oldest parts of it were the shafts, and that the native tombs had come only afterwards.

The aborigines, when they made use of the Egyptian tombs, adopted more or less the Egyptian customs; they had no fixed rule. Therefore we find a great variety in those usurped burials, and a mixture of different systems. For instance, we have a rectangular shaft with an open chamber containing the contracted body of a child. It is quite evident that it is not for such a burial that a large shaft with a side-chamber has been cut in the rock.

The shaft in which you see this half-contracted body was also made originally for another occupant.

Another shaft with an open chamber contains a contracted body in a thick box; it cuts through a surface tomb where the legs only have been preserved with two pots and a palette.

As we said before, a shaft with a side-chamber is a regular Egyptian burial, where we expect to find a coffin with funeral objects, but not a crouched body without anything, in a rudely-made box. Occasionally we may find extended bodies as well in the shafts as on the surface. I do not believe this to be a sign of a great chronological interval. It only means that the natives followed the customs of the Egyptians. For instance, we found once an extended body having on the stomach a red vase with a black rim, of the most characteristic native type. I cannot assign a date to that burial. We found also graves of children with extended bodies, wearing stone amulets, the date of which is uncertain.

When did the invasion of the cemetery take place, and how long did it last? This question is extremely difficult to answer. I feel rather inclined to assign to it a late date. I do not think it can be earlier than the XIth Dynasty. What adds to the confusion is the fact that very late constructions or burials, even of Roman times, are built on the top of the other ones. We found also a big jar containing more than seventy mummies of kittens, which must be of a very late epoch.

I hope you will realise from this description the interest of the excavations in this cemetery. It seems to me to prove the coexistence of the old African stock and of the Pharaonic Egyptians. The two elements, which were separated at the beginning like the Normans and the Saxons, after a time coalesced together so as to form one single nation; but it seems to me that at the beginning the two elements must be distinguished, and I believe we can still recognise them in certain pictures as late as the XIth Dynasty, and also in one of the most interesting objects of the Cairo Museum. In a tomb of the XIth or XIIth Dynasty, near Assiut, were found two companies of soldiers; one of them is decidedly Egyptian, of a reddish colour; the men are armed with a lance, the shaft of which is of wood with a long copper point. The other company, of forty men also, is made up of men with a much darker skin; they are armed with a bow and arrows tipped with flint. They are not negroes, but clearly Africans, and I cannot help considering them as light infantry recruited among the native population, perhaps in Nubia, perhaps also in Egypt itself. These archers seem to me the men who are buried in the prehistoric tombs.

These primitive Egyptians who had not advanced beyond the neolithic civilisation, did not know the use of metal. I believe we find their name in the Egyptian inscriptions; they are called the Anu, and if we examine what this name covers, we find the Anu in Egypt, in Nubia, on the Upper Nile; the Libyan populations of the west are also called Anu, and the populations of the Sinai peninsula, where the Anu seem to have preceded the Aamu, the Semites. Thees Anu are the Hamites of the north and east part of Africa.

Allow me here a short digression, showing how in history questions are linked together. I said that we find the Anu, the Hamites, in the Sinaitic peninsula. You know the connection which has always existed between Sinai and the southern part of Palestine. It is quite possible that the Anu, the Hamites, may have gone beyond the peninsula, and may have advanced along the coast in Palestine. Now in the Egyptian inscriptions Canaan means only the southern part of the land of Canaan. If, therefore, we admit that the Anu have spread as far as the land which the Egyptians call Canaan, the writer of Genesis x. would be perfectly right when he places Canaan among the sons of Ham; he would make a statement agreeing with the Egyptian inscriptions. It would thence be difficult to attribute that statement to the author of the "priestly code," writing between 600 and 400 B.C. We should have here a confirmation of what has been stated from another side, that the original inhabitants of the land of the Philistines were not Semites. You will ask me: who are the Pharaonic Egyptians, where did they come from? I believe that judging by the evidence derived from the Egyptian traditions and Egyptian customs, they were conquerors coming from the south; they were also Africans, Hamites. They did not bring to Egypt a ready-made civilisation, but they had on the natives two points of superiority. They knew how to work metal, and they were agriculturists. They domesticated the animals which, as Dr. Lortet has proved, belong to the native fauna of Africa. This mixture of the two elements, this alloy, if I may say so, produced the Egyptian civilisation, which is purely indigenous; in particular in the writing there is absolutely no trace of Semitic influence—it is purely Egyptian. That the conquerors, whose kings were all called Horus, and whose god was Apuatu, he who opens the way, came from the land which Diodorus called Ethiopia, seems to me established by Egyptian traditions. Whether originally, before their long stay on the Upper Nile, they had reached the river from Southern Arabia, is another question, which seems to me more doubtful, although it has many points in its favour.

I must now revert to the other part of our work, at 'Omm el Gaab, in the so-called royal tombs. There we applied the method we had used at Deir el Bahari, we worked with cars kindly lent to us by the "Service des Antiquités." These cars worked on two separate lines, branching off from the north-east corner where we had stopped last year. One of these branches went straight towards the tomb of Den. We stopped at the top of the staircase going down to the main chamber. During these excavations were discovered two important fragments, a potsherd and a piece of a crystal vase, giving us names which are data for the reconstitution of the early dynasties. The other branch started from the lines of horizontal vases which looked like the edges of roads or causeways, and of which we had discovered two last year. Our intention was to clear the square on the south side of which is the tomb of Den, and on the west the tomb which Prof. Petrie calls Zer, Prof. Erman Khent, and which I read Shesti. In this tomb, which he had discovered at the end of 1897, M. Amélineau found the granite bed, with the figure of Osiris, which led him to consider this tomb as the grave of Osiris. The neighbourhood of that tomb requires a thorough exploration. The lines of pottery of the year before pointed to that direction.

Very soon after the work had been started, we could see that the rows of horizontal pots were not the lining of roads. The pots are of a late epoch, in comparison with the age of the graves. I do not believe them to be older than the XIXth or perhaps the XVIIIth Dynasty. A great number of painted fragments are the well-known work of that time; and they may be connected with the repairs said to have been made by Seti I. Occasionally the lines were interrupted by sorts of pockets or heaps of vases of a much earlier date, probably contemporary with the tombs. They are generally of a very coarse material, either complete or in fragments. In the rubbish, which was desert sand, we found like last year hundreds of small cups or tumblers of coarse earthernware, quite new and having never been used. There is no sign of the existence of a factory on the spot, and it is difficult to explain why these heaps of small cups were brought there, and whether they had a religious purpose. Just beyond the line of pots, on a bed of hard sand, were found six mud figures of Osiris, painted, and of very good workmanship. Two of them had strings of blue beads round the neck. This find taken in connection with the discovery of the bed of Osiris made by M. Amélineau, in a tomb about forty yards in front of the place where the statuettes were lying, seems to point to the worship of Osiris on that spot; and it will be interesting to excavate that square, which has not been searched either by M. Amélineau or Prof. Petrie.

This work in the royal tombs I consider as the most important task for next winter. Abydos is certainly the place in Egypt where we may expect the most numerous and most important finds about the early kings. The fact that Seti I in his temple inscribed the most complete list which we now have of his predecessors seems to show that there must have been monuments going back probably as far as the first sovereign who ruled over the two parts of Egypt. A great deal has been done already, chiefly by M. Amélineau and Prof. Petrie, but it is very far from being final. The funeral monuments of several kings have been discovered, and various systems have been proposed for the reconstitution of the two first dynasties. Nearly all these systems start from the idea that a king whose first name is Aha, and who had funeral monuments at Abydos and at Nagadah, is Menes, the founder of the Egyptian Kingdom. The publication, which will take place next year, of recovered fragments of a very valuable stone in the museum at Palermo will show that Aha is not Menes, and therefore these systems will have to be considerably modified.

Is Menes to be found at Abydos? Are there pre-Menite Kings or not? Is it possible to reconstitute from the monuments the list of Seti I in his temple? Shall we be able to restore the series of the Kings of the two first Dynasties, the beginning and the base of the history of Egypt? All these questions have not yet been solved. These are the results we are looking for in a thorough clearing of Omm el Ga'ab, and which it does not seem likely that we shall obtain anywhere else.

You see the far-reaching questions which are raised now by the excavations in Egypt. And here allow me to insist on the great change which has taken place in historical studies for the last thirty years. The literary proof has in numerous cases been superseded by the results due to the work of the pick and the spade. Archaeology will lead us to the truth which in many questions has too often been looked for in a microscopical analysis of a written text. I know that in the archaeological method there are also rocks ahead of which it is important to keep clear. A few potsherds are not enough to reconstruct history. The literary proof is not to be discarded; it must be illustrated by the light of excavations. Therefore the future of history lies in archaeology, and in the excavations through which it lives and grows. But in order to make archaeology really fruitful, it is necessary to give up an idea which I cannot call otherwise than fatal. Archaeology is not the art of finding objects so as to make collections and fill museums; it is the discovery, the study of the remains of the past ages which have survived through perhaps several thousands of ages. In many cases a negative result or the find of an object which has no interest whatever for a museum will be of more importance for history than a fine work of art. I do not know whether I have been able to give you an idea of the important questions which may arise from clearing the royal tombs of Abydos, or excavating the mixed cemetery. If I have succeeded in rousing your interest, I must beg you to go on supporting the work of the Egypt Exploration Fund; and I specially ask you not to owe us a grudge if we do not send numerous boxes of antiquities from our field of labour, even if once we let a year pass without any exhibition. Pray, remember that our aim must be in the first place the discovery of truth, and to this noble purpose we wish to devote the resources which you generously put in our hands.
